fought for the cause of labor in this and several previous sessions of Congress have told railroad brotherhood leaders within the bast two days that strike would severely injure organ ized labor, and set its progress back at least twenty years.

This has been told to the brotherhood men in plain terms by the very congressmen to whom organized labor looks for legislation it is constantly seeking. These men form the "labor group" in Congress and are recognized as champions of the cause.

Secretary Wilson Reports.

Secretary Wilson of the Departmen of Labor, himself a former congressman and former chairman of the House committee on labor, has been present at the conferences between congressmen and labor leaders in the last fortyeight hours. He has reported the sen-timent of Congress to the administra-

"This Congress has been the best friehd of labor in a legislative way that labor has ever had," was said to the railroad brotherhood men by memthe railroad brotherhood men by members of the labor group in the House. "It ill becomes labor to take this blind leap without giving Congress a chance." Now that the railroad brotherhoods know that their friends in Congress are earnestly working to arrive at a solution, and have shown every effort to get eight-hour day legislation on the books at the shortest possible notice, there may be a turn for the better in the strike situation. the strike situation

Will Forfeit Public Good Will.

The earnest conviction of leaders of forfeit the sympathy of the American public if a strike is actually put into operation in the face of the actual efforts of Congress to forestall one and give each side what it considers a fair deal. Railroad brotherhood leaders were told today in private conversation with labor men in Congress that all signs pointed to a defeat for the men if a strike is started.

A democrat who will be a central figure in possible railroad legislation was recently quoted in The Star as saying that, if a strike is started a great demand will arise throughout the country to repeal the exemption clause of the Clayton act, whereby labor organizations are not held to account under the Sherman anti-trust act. This was called to the attention of the labor men today and yesterday. give each side what it considers a fair

Railroad officials would not comment upon the possibility, beyond saying that they do not think the telegraphers, who are not concerned in the present struggle, will take any part in the strike if it comes.

The telegraphers would benefit more by keeping out of the railroad fight, one official believed, and awaiting the action of Congress as to an eight-hour day. If Congress should pass a law making eight hours a day's work for railroad trainmen, it was said, it would be merely a question of time before all other classes of railroad employes and organized labor generally would inorganized labor generally would in-sist upon sharing the benefit of such
